ABSTRACT

This document is designed to provide assistance to those students seeking information on colleges and universities that offer law enforcement and criminal justice degree programs. For this 1975-76 directory, questionnaires were mailed to every college and university in the United States and to those colleges and universities known to be offering criminal justice degree programs in Canada. The completed questionnaires indicate that there are 664 institutions offering 729 associate, 376 baccalaureate, 121 masters, and 19 doctoral degrees in the areas of law enforcement and criminal justice. In contrast, there were 40 associate and 15 baccalaureate and graduate degree programs available in this nation in 1960. The directory covers: (1) number of law enforcement and criminal justice degree programs available; (2) associate degree programs; (3) baccalaureate and graduate degree programs; (4) police officer enrollment data; (5) program listings by state; (6) program listings by colleges and universities; (7) the Law Enforcement Education Program (LEEP), which provides financial support for the college education of police, courts, corrections and other law enforcement and criminal justice practitioners; and (8) additional International Association of Chiefs of Police publications. FOREWORD

Writing a foreword for a directory is a little like writing an epilogue for a telephone book. Perplexed, and wanting in the spirit to proceed with the task, I tossed before my feet the forty-nine yarrow stalks and sought, by sorting them, the advice of the Ancient Book of Changes -- The I Ching.

The "I" said to me --

"At the outset the man presses forward prematurely without sufficient preparation and strength. Initial setbacks due to blind miscalculations are grounds for blame."

Is not the "I" the perfect book? For what better advice could one ask? The foreword is, must be, that important tasks must not be undertaken by those unprepared for them. This directory is a guide to that preparation which must precede professional and responsible practice in the delivery of justice at any level of government.

Nothing you can learn, regardless of the sanctity of the discipline, will go unused in your pursuit of justice. Gather knowledge and ideas and let them enhance your experiences -- let them increase your tolerance and understanding of man and his habitat. For it is in this arena that we work.

In the meanwhile, as you prepare, do not concern yourself with unimportant matters -- such as nations, governments and those who claim sole possession of sacred knowledges -- rather concern yourself with the earth, its people and their needs and learn yourself, to be just.

INTRODUCTION

The interest in higher education for law enforcement officers is considered by many to have been initiated by Chief August Vollmer of the Berkeley, California Police Department. In 1916, Chief Vollmer established a police training school within his department, utilizing faculty from the University of California at Berkeley. He also prevailed upon these same professors to begin offering courses in criminology and other law enforcement subjects during summer sessions at the University.

Two major developments in law enforcement education occurred in 1929: The University of Chicago began offering courses in police science for undergraduate students and the University of Southern California established an advanced degree program in public administration, with a major in law enforcement. August Vollmer continued to promote the need for higher education in the police profession and, in 1931, as a faculty member at the University of California, Berkeley, he initiated programs which ultimately led to the establishment of the School of Criminology. The first two-year degree program in law enforcement was established in 1930 at San Jose State College, San Jose, California; this program ultimately became a four-year degree program. In 1935, Michigan State University established a bachelor of science degree program in police administration with a five-year curriculum designed specifically to prepare students for law enforcement careers. Since the 1930's, hundreds of colleges and universities throughout the nation have established a variety of educational programs for law enforcement officers and criminal justice personnel, including traditional degree programs, seminars, symposiums and institutes. Appreciation and recognition must be offered to the leadership and foresight of these law enforcement and academic community pioneers who recognized the increasing demands upon law enforcement and criminal justice personnel and met the challenge.

The continuing plea that this nation would benefit from both the increased enrollment of in-service police personnel in college and university programs and the recruitment of more college graduates into the law enforcement and criminal justice professions, has been more than adequately stated in the past decade by a host of law enforcement and criminal justice leaders, academicians, committees, associations, and governmental commissions. Most recently, the National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals recommended the following standards in its 1973 report:

Standard 15.1

Educational Standards for the Selection of Police Personnel

To insure the selection of personnel with the qualifications to perform police duties properly, every police agency should establish the following entry-level educational requirements:

1. Every police agency should require immediately, as a condition of initial employment, the completion of at least 1 year of education (30 semester units) at an accredited college or university. Otherwise qualified police applicants who do not satisfy this condition, but who have earned a high school diploma or its equivalent, should be employed under a contract requiring completion of the educational requirement within 3 years of initial employment.

2. Every police agency should, no later than 1975, require as a condition of initial employment the completion of at least 2 years of education (60 semester units) at an accredited college or university.

3. Every police agency should, no later than 1978, require as a condition of initial employment the completion of at least 3 years of education (90 semester units) at an accredited college or university.

4. Every police agency should, no later than 1982, require as a condition of initial employment the completion of at least 4 years of education (120 semester units or a baccalaureate degree) at an accredited college or university.

Recognizing the importance of higher education for police personnel, the issue of advanced education in law enforcement has now centered upon the academic question of how do we best go about educating and preparing people for law enforcement and criminal justice careers, whether these people are presently employed or are seeking a career in one of the various components of our system of justice. There are several philosophies concerning the mission of criminal justice programs in colleges or universities; however, most commentators feel that the philosophy should be to provide an educational basis for professional careers in the administration of criminal justice through programs with a strong liberal arts base. A blending of liberal education with the social and behavioral sciences and professional courses prepares the student to be a criminal justice generalist, not a narrow, vocationally-oriented specialist.

Few social systems impinge on as broad a social spectrum as do the criminal justice processes. Therefore, we must develop educational programs which are functional to the needs of both in-service and pre-service criminal justice personnel, with concentration upon the three major processes which are present throughout the criminal justice system: social control, therapeutic services and management of personnel and resources. These programs must be academically sound and not designed to transmit basic entry-level type skills.

In addition, it is not merely enough to recruit capable, college-educated, intelligent men and women into the law enforcement and criminal justice systems of the nation; there must also be an upgrading of the educational levels of current practitioners within the law enforcement and criminal justice system. Academicians and practitioners agree that the aim of education is to teach each individual how to think logically, how to reason and how to understand. This goal may be obtained by providing current in-service and pre-service practitioners with a general liberal arts education blended with the social sciences and criminal justice courses.

This Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice Education Directory is designed to provide assistance to those students seeking information on colleges and universities which offer law enforcement and criminal justice degree programs.

The International Association of Chiefs of Police first began publishing this Directory in 1966, when the staff of the Professional Standards Division undertook the task of determining the types of programs and number of degree granting institutions that existed in the field of police science in the United States. The results were based on questionnaires circulated to various schools which had appeared on one or more lists of those offering a law enforcement program as part of their curricula. In addition, other programs were verified through previous survey responses plus the records of other associations and organizations having access to such information. The study revealed a total of 184 separate institutions issuing police science degrees with 152 associate, 39 baccalaureate, 14 masters and four doctorate degree programs available to prospective students in the area of law enforcement education.

In 1968, a follow-up survey revealed an increase in these figures to a total of 234 separate degree granting institutions offering 199 associate, 44 baccalaureate, 13 masters and five doctorate degree programs. The 1970 Directory saw these numbers rise to a total of 292 separate institutions offering 257 associate, 55 baccalaureate, 21 masters and seven doctorate degrees. The 1972-1973 survey indicated a total of 515 institutions offering 505 associate, 211 baccalaureate, 41 masters and nine doctorate degrees.

For this 1975-76 Directory, questionnaires were mailed to every college and university in the United States and to those colleges and universities known to be offering criminal justice degree programs in Canada. Non-responding schools were mailed a second questionnaire, with an expanded time period allocated to enable them to reply. The completed questionnaires indicate that there are 664 institutions offering 729 associate, 376 baccalaureate, 121 masters, and 19 doctorate degrees in the areas of law enforcement and criminal justice. In contrast, there were 40 associate and 15 baccalaureate and graduate degree programs available in this nation in 1960.

Following is a numerical breakdown of essential information contained in all of the education directories published by the IACP to date:

Directory	Associate	Baccalaureate	Masters	Doctorate	Number of Institutions
1966-1967	152	39	14	4	184
1968-1969	199	44	13	5	234
1970-1971	257	55	21	7	292
1972-1973	505	211	41	9	515
1975-1976	729	376	121	19	664

This new survey was initiated in an effort to collect and disseminate information on data that the IACP anticipates will be useful to educators developing or conducting programs, students and counselors involved in planning for law enforcement careers, and police officers and criminal justice personnel concerned with the current academic foundation of their professions.

It is acknowledged that there may be a need to communicate with us concerning additional program offerings and adjustments to current programs listed. For this purpose, included as the last pages of this Directory are blank questionnaire forms to be prepared and forwarded to us. It is anticipated that we will prepare an addendum to this Directory and publish future directories.

Assistance in design and compilation of this Directory was provided by IACP staff members Sharon Jones and Robert H. Mendoza.

*Includes courses taken at Southeast
Community College, Burlington, Iowa, or other institution.

We have a joint program worked out with Southeast Community College, whereby an exchange of credits is possible, as well as occasional exchange of Faculty.
Courses in criminal justice are taught mostly on the Southeast campus, the sociology courses mostly on the Wesleyan campus. We have further tried to ease the transfer situation for those with
AA degrees coming from junior colleges.

 Figures in this area are estimates only. We do expect that about 110 people will graduate this year. The breakdown represents our best guess in each category.

Our primary commitment is to provide a two year college experience for in-service law enforcement personnel as well as pre-service people planning for law enforcement careers.
Most in-service personnel are from the Suffolk County, Nassau County, and New York City Police Departments.

Bowling Green State University, in cooperation with Michael J. Owens Technical College, is contemplating the development of a Criminal Justice Program involving Law Enforcement and Corrections. The introduction of the program is scheduled for sometime during the Academic Year 1974-75.

The enrollment expectations are in the several hundreds, including both police officers and other students. The degree offered will be the Baccalaureate of Science with specialization in Law Enforcement and Corrections. Michael J. Owens Technical College already has the two year program (AA Degree) in Law Enforcement.

Courses Offered: Graduate

☐ ID Continuing Education

Full-time Faculty No. 9

Part-time Faculty No. 10

Courses Offered: Undergraduate

The University of Wisconsin-Madison is committed to enrolling in-service and pre-service law enforcement personnel in established liberal arts programs along with the general body of undergraduates. The Law Enforcement Education Program provides specialized academic and financial aid counselling.

All LEEP loan recipients take a minimum of 15 credits of courses directly related to criminal justice such as criminology, admin. of criminal justice, probation and parole, and correctional administration. A major in sociology, political science or social work is most common, though degrees in Business or Agriculture are available.

Courses Offered: Graduate

The School of Social Work offers a Masters Degree with field placement in corrections and correctional administration and related coursework. The University also offers a Masters Degree in Public Policy and Administration with a concentration in criminal justice, corrections or correctional social work. The two Masters degrees may be taken simultaneously with sufficient advance planning. The Department of Sociology offers graduate work in Deviance, Law and Social Control.

SECTION 4

Law Enforcement Education Program

LEEP -- A STEP AHEAD

Law Enforcement Education Program

The Law Enforcement Education Program (LEEP) provides financial support for the college education of police, courts, corrections and other law enforcement and criminal justice practitioners. With LEEP assistance, men and women working in the criminal justice system have the opportunity to improve their professional competence while at the same time upgrading the general performance level of their employing agencies. Students preparing for criminal justice careers also may participate in the program.

The criminal justice officer's role is demanding and complex. Many employees of the criminal justice system have expressed a desire to obtain a college education. An increasing number of police and correctional agencies have recognized the importance of college education in criminal justice and have established an Associate degree as an entrance requirement. Some require a Bachelor's degree. Probation, parole and juvenile correctional agencies usually require a Bachelor's or Master's degree. Agencies are encouraging employees to return to college part time in order to meet their changing educational requirements.

LEEP Grants and Loans

Two types of financial assistance are available under LEEP to pay for tuition, fees and books:

GRANTS up to $250 per academic quarter or $400 per semester.

LOANS up to $2,200 per academic year. Criminal justice personnel on academic leave to attend school full time may qualify for loans beyond the cost of tuition, mandatory fees and books (but not to exceed $2,200).

Eligibility for Grants

You are eligible for a LEEP grant, if you are a full-time professional employee of a publicly-funded police, courts, corrections or other law enforcement and criminal justice agency. Also you are eligible as a state or local criminal justice planner or as a member of a campus police force who has authority under state or local law to enforce the criminal statutes. You must agree to remain in full-time criminal justice employment for a period of two years following completion of the course for which you receive a LEEP grant. The college or university you attend must be a LEEP participant.

In-service students include court administrators, correctional officers and counselors, employees of public half-way houses, probation and parole workers, juvenile counselors and police officers.

Eligibility for Loans

You are eligible for a LEEP loan if you qualify for a grant, as described above, and if you are also enrolled full time in a college which participates in LEEP. Preservice students must also be enrolled in a crime-related degree program (as defined and approved by the Administration). State and local police and corrections personnel on academic leave from full-time employment receive preference for funds.

Preservice students (those not yet employed in a criminal justice agency) may also receive loans. All borrowers must be committed to obtaining or resuming full-time employment in criminal justice upon cessation of full-time study.

All loan recipients must be full-time students.

Programs of Study

The law prescribes that LEEP recipients must be enrolled in programs leading to degrees or certificates in areas related to law enforcement and criminal justice or suitable for persons employed in law enforcement and criminal justice. While many students are enrolled in criminal justice or law enforcement programs, others are enhancing their preparation for criminal justice careers by enrolling in liberal arts programs.

In-service students may broaden their education by enrolling in courses in business administration, psychology, political science, computer science, public administration and government. Pre-service students may benefit from courses in Public Service-Law Enforcement, the Administration of Justice or Human Services-Corrections.

All LEEP recipients must attend a college or university that participates in LEEP.

Earning the Grant

The person who obtains a LEEP grant must remain in full-time criminal justice employment for a period of two complete years following the academic term for which the grant is awarded. Otherwise, the grantee must repay the full amount of the grant plus interest.

Loan Cancellation

The loan recipient can earn 25 percent cancellation of the amount borrowed for each complete year of full-time criminal justice employment. For any portion of the loan which cannot be cancelled, the borrower will be required to repay principal plus accrued interest.

Applying for a LEEP Grant or Loan

Participating colleges and universities administer LEEP grants and loans. Student application forms are available from all LEEP institutions.

If you think you are eligible, contact the Student Financial Aid Office or Criminal Justice Department at the college or university you will be attending.

For a list of participating schools in your area, or additional program information, contact your regional office of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration.

James Sterling's Changes in Role Concepts of Police Officers is the result of a detailed longitudinal study of 113 young police officers in four different cities. Each officer was tested and observed at three key points in his early police career: at the start of recruit training, at the completion of training, and after 18 months as a patrolman.

The study reveals the conflict between the officers' need to be authoritarian and impersonal when dealing with criminal matters while remaining capable of friendly and sensitive responses to people involved in noncriminal situations. Self-awareness is seen as a fundamental prerequisite to understanding and responding to the needs of others.

Because the problems posed in this study are often complex, a considerable number of ideas for new training strategies are presented. (PSD003; $5.00)

Criminal Investigation, 2nd edition, contains 38 chapters, organized into six principal areas of instruction: investigative concepts, obtaining information, the crime scene, scientific evidence, specific offenses, and a concluding chapter on the courts and the investigator. A thorough review of fundamentals is provided in chapters that describe the investigative report, interviewing, physical description, protecting the crime scene, and evidence collecting. More specialized chapters deal with certain criminal investigative methods that have proved effective in the following criminal offenses: homicide, robbery, sex crimes, auto theft, burglary, dangerous drugs and narcotics. Review questions are included at the end of each chapter to enable the reader to test his comprehension of the material. (CIS000, Paperback, $3.95; CIH000, Hardback, $4.95)

Crisis Intervention and the Police: Selected Readings, edited by Richard W. Kobetz. This 264-page book is a collection of readings which collectively describe processes by which law enforcement agencies are learning to recognize and cope with crisis situations. Since the whole concept of crisis intervention is new, there are few solid existing programs and the need for specialized training on the police level is becoming greater. Crisis Intervention and the Police assists law enforcement administrators in planning and establishing special "crisis intervention" units and training personnel in crisis management techniques. (PSD006; $4.75)

Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice Education Directory, 1975-76. This directory is the result of responses from questionnaires distributed to degree granting institutions in order to determine the types of programs and degrees offered in the field of law enforcement and criminal justice. The Directory lists all colleges and universities responding to our questionnaire by state and includes the following information: name and address of the institution; course names; type of degree offered; field(s) in which the degree is offered; number of faculty members in the department; current student enrollment; number of credits required for a degree; whether the school offers day and/or evening courses, intern programs, and correspondence courses; pertinent graduate data; and who to contact for further information. (PSD007; $5.00)

Issues in Human Relations contains five articles by the late Dr. Nelson Watson that share a common purpose: the description of complex ideas about psychology and human behavior in clear terms that the average officer can understand and read with interest. "Understanding Conflict" clarifies ideas about the nature of conflict in such a way that the reader can apply the learned information immediately to his everyday responsibilities. "Emotional Stability" discusses the elements that make up that vague designation and suggests reasonable parameters for judging behavior including the normal role for emotions in police life. The remaining three articles -- "Attitudes: A Factor in Performance," "Threats and Challenges," and "Officer-Citizen Contacts" -- similarly address themselves to difficult subjects that too often have been discussed only in terms that behavioral scientists can understand. (PSD005; $4.50)

Journal of Police Science and Administration. This new quarterly publication keeps subscribers abreast of new discoveries and techniques in these two vital disciplines of criminal justice. It reports the findings of practitioners through the use of feature articles, case studies, research projects, and technical data. New legislation impacting on police science and administration is reported and contributing authors with established and recognized expertise provide the most diversified views available.

Juvenile Justice Administration by Richard W. Kobetz and Betty B. Bosarge. This 770-page book is the result of a series of interdisciplinary conferences conducted throughout the United States in 1971 and 1972. The purpose of these conferences was to discuss and assess problems in delinquency prevention and control, and develop recommendations for improving the juvenile justice system. The book explores system problems from a nationwide perspective, analyzing communications difficulties which hinder effective system-wide planning and coordination. (PSD011; $9.75)

Compiled from a series of Training Keys on patrol operations, The Patrol Operation, 2nd edition, contains the kind of reliable, concise information that patrol officers need to perform their complex duties. Patrol methods described in this book have been tested and proved effective in the field. Basic patrol functions such as the following are presented in step-by-step detail: field note-taking, interviews, crime scene protection, searching a vehicle, and transporting prisoners. Among the many newly revised chapters are those that describe foot and car patrol, experimentation in patrol tactics, and tactics for crowd control. Review and discussion questions are included at the end of each chapter so that each reader can test his own comprehension of the material. A short bibliography is also supplied to direct the reader to other material on the same subjects. (POS000, Paperback, $3.50; POH000, Hardback, $4.50)

The Police Chief. The official monthly publication of the IACP, The Police Chief presents articles written by officials in law enforcement from the theoretical as well as the practical point of view. Each issue, in addition to focusing on current law enforcement topics, contains an editorial, letters, IACP in Action, Professional News Capsules, and Product Patrol columns. A "Positions Open" column for practitioners seeking employment in law enforcement is also provided.

The Police Role and Juvenile Delinquency by Richard W. Kobetz. This 264-page book is the result of a study performed by the International Association of Chiefs of Police to develop juvenile/police operational procedures in coordination with Supreme Court decisions which have altered and restricted the police role. This book explores the nature and extent of the delinquency problems and offers policy guidelines to assist in coping with and controlling these problems. Administrative and organizational concepts are proposed; suggested functions of the police/juvenile unit are presented; and the future role of the police in dealing with the problems of delinquency is explored. The Police Role and Juvenile Delinquency discusses the principles and processes of police authority and responsibility and serves as a guide in the development of workable, realistic solutions to pressing, contemporary problems involving juvenile criminality. ASSISTANCE AVAILABLE
PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS DIVISION

The Professional Standards Division of the International Association of Chiefs of Police offers the following direct assistance programs:

o SPECIALIZED ON-SITE TRAINING

The Professional Standards Division conducts specialized on-site training. These specialized training schools are conducted for individual police agencies or through regional training committees and are tailored to meet the specific needs of the department or region. Attendees are selected by the individual agency; the IACP provides instructors, texts and training materials and handles all administrative work involved with the seminar. A detailed budget is developed upon request, and a sample program is presented subject to modifications requested during consultation with local administrators.

o EVALUATIONS OF POLICE TRAINING ACADEMIES

The Professional Standards Division conducts studies and provides services and consultation for the improvement of training at police academies. Studies are conducted in three phases: statement of the present status; identification of training needs; and the presentation of a model training system. Phase I (present status) evaluates the present curriculum; instructional materials; instructor skills and abilities; and the feasibility of providing college credit for academy courses. Phase II (training needs) evaluates the necessity for improved supervision and management, as well as specialized, technical in-service and recruit training as they relate to contemporary and future needs. A comprehensive model training system (phase III) will be recommended with specifics addressed to all areas of study. This will be accomplished by comparing training needs to the present training status.

o EVALUATIONS OF COLLEGE LAW ENFORCEMENT AND CRIMINAL JUSTICE DEGREE PROGRAMS

The Professional Standards Division performs evaluations of existing degree programs in the field of law enforcement and criminal justice at various colleges and universities, as well as the feasibility of establishing law enforcement degree programs.

Studies of existing programs include evaluations of organization, administration, goals, curriculum, faculty, students, resources, facilities, and applicability of courses to student career objectives. Results of the evaluation are presented along with constructive suggestions for improvement based on practical reality.

Studies concerning the feasibility of establishing a degree program involve a survey to determine if there is a sufficient potential student enrollment. Through personal interviews with faculty and administrators and research instruments administered to potential students, it is possible to gather information concerning the attitudes of all who would be affected by such a program and make recommendations based on those findings. In addition, the Professional Standards Division presents a sample curriculum from the freshman year through degree completion to serve as a guide in the actual establishment of a criminal justice program.
